Puppy Mouths

Puppy teeth start developing as soon as three weeks old (incisors: 6 upper and 6 lower). Within the next week they should develop their 4 canine teeth and when your pet is 4-12 weeks old, they should develop the rest of their teeth (12 pre-molars). Puppies' teeth should be fully developed at 12 weeks of age.

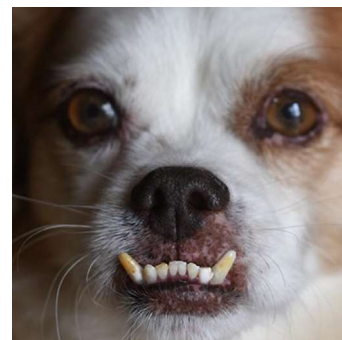

Sometimes things don't go as planned and there are abnormalities with your pet's skeleton or teeth. Baby teeth are sharp and cause significant pain and damage to a pup's mouth if they're in the wrong position.

Overbite: Is when the top jaw is too long, or the lower jaw is too short. Often the lower canines will cause damage to the upper palate and the two lower baby canines will need to be removed.

(Greenfield)

Underbite: This is when the bottom is longer than the top jaw. If the bottom jaw is very narrow or "birdy mouth" like a beak, then teeth on the lower jaw may cause damage to the tongue or other teeth and gums. Often with puppies, you can encourage them to play and hold a ball in their mouth, and in many cases, the lower jaw will open or widen helping to resolve the problem.

(Castle, 2020)

(Wry mouth 2023)

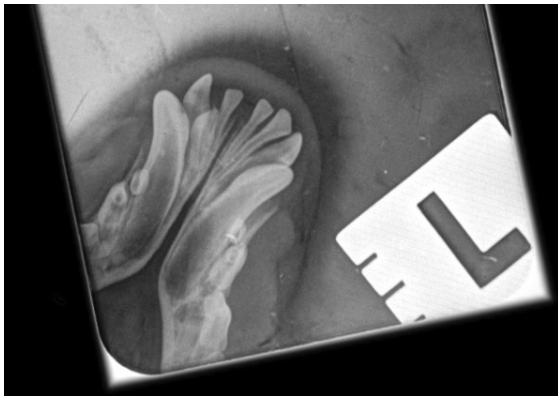

Wry mouth: This is when the jaw isn't lining up properly. This frequently happens with trauma to the mouth and the degree to which it affects pets is variable.

Shark mouth: Sometimes baby teeth don't fall out. It may be only one or a few teeth, often the canine teeth. Sometimes a dog may have a double row of teeth. When this happens, it will cause the permanent teeth to be pushed out of position. All baby teeth must come out and, in some cases, your vet may need to operate to remove persistent baby teeth.

(Stickings, 2019)

Unerupted teeth: Sometimes a tooth doesn't erupt. It may be impacted. An X-ray is needed to diagnose this. An embedded tooth can become cystic, abscessed, and painful. In this scenario, this tooth would need to be removed.

There are many other abnormalities in puppy teeth. A vet needs to check your puppy's teeth at about 12 weeks of age when all baby teeth should be present and again at 5-6 months of age when all permanent teeth should be present.
