Lick Granulomas

A lick granuloma is a lesion on the skin formed due to frequent and excessive licking. Often the problem is on the top of the forearm, above the paw. Often there is hairloss and red ulcerated skin, sometimes with scabs, often thickened.

There are many factors that can start off a lick granuloma such as: pain (may be bone or joint pain), nerve pain, a wound, bacterial infection, furunculosis (ruptured hair follicles), allergy, mites, behaviour issues including boredom. It is important where ever possible to try to work out what started the problem so this can be treated adequately. Although excessive licking perpetuates the problem, often this is not what started it. This usually means a skin scraping to check for mites and a biopsy if there is any risk of deep fungal infection or neoplasia or if not improving with treatment. Xrays may be needed if any underlying bone or joint problems or osteoarthritis or neoplasia. Blood tests are advisable if ulcers are present and not healing.

Cavalier King Charles Spaniel Club of NSW Inc. Newsletter

High dose of antibiotics are needed usually (double dose) as often infection is deep and walled off (in chronic fibrosis) at least 4 weeks on antibiotics will be needed and 6-8 weeks are often necessary. Often these infections are multi-drug resistant, so more than 1 antibiotic may be needed and a swab (or tissue) for culture and sensitivity may be needed to show best choice of drug.

In most cases glucocorticoids (cortisone) are needed at the same time as antibiotics. This is because your pet's body will often react to inflammation from ruptured hair follicles and ruptured apocrine glands within the skin by being very itchy. Antibiotics will be needed for longer than cortisone but both for at least the first 2 weeks. (up to 3 months treatment can be needed in severe cases)

You will need to have some way of preventing your pet from licking the problem area. This may be an Elizabethan collar, a bandage or sock or sometimes using a layer of super glue (but beware, some dogs will just lick around this and then you get a bigger lesion). If you are able to find something that tastes so horrible your pet won't lick it off, this may be enough. Good luck trying.

Some pets need meds and/or behaviour modification training, to modify their obsessive compulsive licking. Talk to your vet if you think your pet needs this. It always helps to spend more time with your pet actively playing and exercising and avoid confining your pet. You may consider getting a companion for your pet. Sometimes behaviour medications reduce anxiety and compulsive behaviours and make life better. Each dog is different and discuss with your vet what will work for your pet and you.

For long standing lesions, laser or radiosurgery treatment may be what makes the difference. Talk to your vet about how this may be the answer for you. We have found laser treatment very helpful.

Rescue:

Members, Since the last report we have had two female Cavaliers surrendered to the Club, A Blenheim 11 months old and a Tri-Colour 7 months old. The Blenheim has gone to a new home on the North Coast town of Laurieton and the Tri-Colour to the Sydney Suburb of Vacluse. We are still getting at least two enquiries per day from people wishing to give a Cavalier a new home and thankfully by people looking after their dogs we are unable to full fill their requests. That is all from me this year wishing you all a Merry Christmas and a great New Year. Cheers from Rhonda & Kevin

Year Book:

All adverts to be in by mid-January.

Health:

Heart and eye clinic set for 24th Feb.

Karen to liase with Dogs NSW for Venues.

Karen still to determine cost.

Events:

10. General Business.

It was proposed that the April meeting be cancelled due to the fact that it is the day before Anzac Day and our Open show. Therefore it was considered that not enough members would be in attendance to reach a quorum. No body at the meeting would have been available and therefore the meeting agreed that April General Meeting will be cancelled

There being no further business the meeting closed at 8.40 pm.
